Boxwood hedges. Elegant terraces. Classical urns. The distinctive style of American gardens in the 18th century was influenced by architectural pattern and garden design books popular in England at the time. A number of these important volumes can be found in Colonial Williamsburg's rare books collection. American gardeners generally preferred simple, unadorned versions of the types of urns, stands, basins, columns and other garden accents shown in these European design books. Campania's Williamsburg® Collection is inspired by 18th-century American designs which celebrated form over ornamentation, a refined aesthetic which feels decidedly contemporary. This exceptional collection of historically inspired garden accents will beautifully complement today's home and garden.
